COAL FLY ASH, a low-tech byproduct. may find some high-tech uses.

Falcon Racing Services Ltd., a Wilkes-Barre, Pa., outfit that owns and races Formula-series racecars, trys out heat shields made from coal fly ash, a residue from burning coal. It is also testing nose Stock cones and "wings" that attach to the cars to out." Create downdraft for better traction. The tests are being done under a research program from UGI Corp.'s UGI Utilities Inc. unit and Wilkes University, both also in Wilkes-Barre.

About 59 million tons of fly ash are generated annually in the U.S.; about 28% of the ash is used commercially in construction and such, and much of the rest ends up in landfills, says the American Coal Ash Association, Alexandria, Va. Wilkes University researcher Francisco Torres-Arandahopes the research will, among other things, help reduce disposal costs, conserve resources and create building products, such as tile and insulation blocks.

Researchers have also grown barley seeds in pelletized coal fly ash.
